

Blind & Vision Rehabilitation Services of Pittsburgh

At The Computer ...

... with the Access Technology Center

Screen Reading Software Available to Microsoft Users

GW Micro, the maker of the Window-Eyes screen reading software, has announced a partnership with Microsoft to make Window-Eyes available to users of Microsoft Office at no cost.

While the free download does not include high quality voices or technical support for Window-Eyes, the Access Technology Center (ATC) staff anticipate that this new pricing plan may attract the interest of many computer users who are blind or vision impaired and their employers. Fortunately, ATC has long offered Window-Eyes evaluation as well as training on using the software, and we are prepared to meet any increased interest in this screen reading program.

Individuals using Microsoft Office 2010 or higher can download a full version of Window-Eyes at www.WindowEyesForOffice.com. The website also provides download instructions as well as additional details about this offer. The software is available in more than 15 languages.

Feel free to contact ATC Coordinator Tracey Morsek, 412-368-4400 ext. 3414, tmorsek@pghvis.org, with any questions you or clients may have about Window-Eyes evaluation and training.